

Meet the Team

---

Jacqueline Durand

Acting Director, Strategy /

Assistant Director, Policy and Projects

I am motivated by ensuring our work is of value to policing. I know we have done our job if our products improve practice, facilitate collaboration or enhance Australia and New Zealand policing as a profession.

---

We are pleased to introduce you to one of the faces working behind the scenes here at ANZPAA. Jacqueline Durand (Acting Director, Strategy) talks about her substantive role as Assistant Director, Policy and Projects, and what drives her.

Seeing ANZPAA grow and establish a strong and trusted reputation is one of the biggest wins for me. ANZPAA is now 15 years old and has really cemented itself as a trusted and capable cross-jurisdictional organisation that not only does policy work, but foresight and research that is of value to police organisations.

Making our work of value to policing is what motivates me. If we can improve practice, facilitate collaboration or enhance policing as a profession, across Australia and New Zealand then we have done our job. Cross-jurisdictional work is challenging, as you have to navigate through the different legislative and policy contexts across Australia and New Zealand. I love negotiating through this and coming up with something that meets the needs of everyone.

I love the variety of work that my team does – we can be working on a policy instrument ranging from technology crime, to work health and safety, to use of force, or to police pursuits. Meeting people who are subject matter experts in those areas and transferring their knowledge and expertise into a policy instrument and/or education and training product that can be used by jurisdictions is very rewarding.